In this two-part series, participants will develop their own stories from writing to photography to create a collaborative zine. Use your voice and tell your story to explore your emotions and individual experiences.

Multidisciplinary artist Tasneem Nanji will guide students to dig deep and learn how storytelling can be empowering and have a positive impact on ourselves and our communities. Photographer and director Pam Lau will give students an opportunity to manifest their ideas and learn technical skills to produce photographs that will be pieced together in a zine.

This is a beginner friendly program for interested folks to explore a story they want to tell and experiment using digital and technical techniques. Access to a computer and smartphone will be required. Camera equipment will be provided by Art Starts.
